

Weam Namou is the Executive Director of the Chaldean Cultural Center, an Eric Hoffer award-winning author of 14 books, an international award-winning filmmaker, journalist, poet, and an Ambassador for the Authors Guild of America [Detroit Chapter], the nation's oldest and largest writing organization. She hosts a half-hour weekly TV show, and she's the founder and president of Unique Voices in Films, a 501 (c)(3) nonprofit organization.

Namou's book, The Great American Family: A Story of Political Disenchantment, won an Eric Hoffer Book Award and her feature documentary with the same title, which she wrote, produced, and directed, earned several international film awards. The book has since been optioned by Gregory Johnson of Range Media Partners (Los Angeles, California) and the feature documentary is now represented by Jeff Porter Pictures (Beverly Hills, California). She's currently in post-production of her first feature film, Pomegranate, which was selected quarter finalist by Francis Coppola's Zoetrope. Executive producers are Scott Rosenfelt and Santa Monica's Buffalo 8 Productions.
